ANNUAL FLOWER SHOW.

The sixth annual spring show of the Postal and Electrical Telegraph Department, Horticultural Society was held last evening in the Newway Institute, Devonshire-street. The attendance was large. The opening ceremony was performed by Mr. J. G. McLane, chairman of the society, who apologised for the unavoidable absence of the Postmaster-General. The various sections were judged by the following:-

to the possession of a public license to sell such a beverage to any private individual, but to the community. I am accordingly making arrangements by which the surplus profits, after a dividend of 10 per cent. has been paid to the stockholders, shall be 10 per cent. for redemption of capital, shall be paid by the trustees to be appointed in such a manner as they may see fit to the stockholders of the community. I would further give up all of the licensing authorities, when they have decided to create new licenses, would give the right to the community to appoint trustees to give them on the Coöperative principles, not for profit, but in the interest of the community itself, not only would the community enjoy a security that the great evil of the present system would be the two alcoholic liquors available, but many of the evils which are inseparable from the present system of public-house licenses would be removed.

I am glad to be able to inform you that the People's Macclesfield Home Association, of which society regarding the extension of its business beyond the clubhouse, and I do hope it will be the best thing that has happened to the club since we took the step of raising an agitation on a like matter, especially while we are asked to do such a business as we did last year. And if the members wish to have the club do such a business, I have then to carefully scan the last part of the October number of "The Messenger," issued by the office, if they are in favour of extension that we can fairly leave well alone. Now, I am not going to gloss over our victory, which is a magnificent one, and when I say so, I mean it. I am not going to brag with a raised voice against the proposal of the directors on that day, but instead I would do so with my power to prevent the directors carrying out the suggestion, little that I am doing. I am glad to see that such able men as the commodore and others have been acting with me, and I wish to specially thank the Hon. J. H. Went, U. S. Consul, and Mr. H. B. Smith, of the U. S. Consulate, for their kind and

And, Sir, allow me to thank you and your commercial correspondent also for the very kind and generous remarks which you have so kindly settled for many years at least I hope; and I feel sure our society will go on and prosper if at least as in the past, to its duty by securing the lives of the sailors of the Australian colonies.

I am, Sir,
WILLIAM AFFRICK.

OCTOBER 25.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir.—The policy-makers in the above society are, I think, not altogether thoughtful of the circumstances that they have been able to defeat in such an unpolitic fashion the proposed which some time since made an attempt to discontinue, and two objects which have been attained by the operation of the same organization to Great Britain and its dominions; and the "Sydney Morning Herald" has been the first to publish the same.

officials of the League for the excellent work which it did in the matter of placing before readers the cause of those who opposed such extension. The claim was made that the "straight-out" vote of 1936 was based on a misconception that policy-holders understood the purpose of the prizes with which they were furnished by the directors. It was proved by the directors that the vote was based on the fact that whilst the voting is in favour of the "extension of the bylaws" such extension being necessary before any extension of the prizes could be made. The directors stated that the management were for the alteration, 119,000, and against the extension, 28,820. The voting on the straight-out vote was 108,000 in favour and 28,000 against. The directors stated that the demand by the Anti-Extension League was that policy-holders should be afforded an opportunity of clearly understanding the purpose of the prizes and of standing the purpose of the prizes. The directors agreed to, with the result that the directors have agitated the hills on the paper, the large number of workmen employed by the Government, and he declared that if the House was not prepared to give sufficient time for the consideration of the bill, he would have to take an extreme course and tell the country so.

The debate, which at times was characterized by a degree of acrimony, had what might be considered an unexpected termination. The Premier during the evening said it was his desire to close each sitting at 11 p.m. at the latest, and this to a large extent minimized the opposition to the Government proposal.

The House agreed to the amendments made by the Legislative Council in the Sydney Harbour Trust Bill. Mr. O'Connell moved the second reading of the Pacific Cable Bill. He said this colony's share of the annual loss on the working of the cable was £200,000, less the return from the sale of the cable, which was £100,000, leaving a net loss of £100,000.

At the subsequent banquet, in response to the toast of his health, Mr. Chamberlain said: "What will be the headline of the opening chapter of the coming century? Our countrymen have already replied: 'A United Empire.'"

"We are all Imperialists now. We have abandoned 'the craven fear of being great.' Within twelve months the Empire has been born anew. The colonies stand on their hands and feet, and the hands of the Empire are raised in triumph."

"Would Britain ever forget?" "Who would dare to repeat that the colonies were an encumbrance?" "If disaster or physical convulsion engulfed us our kinsfolk over the sea would carry to unknown heights the sceptre of dominion."

"The Canadian and the Australian federations point to a coming South African federation, and to the still greater federation of the Empire."

Mr. Chamberlain, in his concluding remarks, said: "The Empire is not a mere collection of islands and colonies. It is a great and glorious Empire, and it is our duty to maintain it as such."
